In a fog of pain medication, it would be two days before Jesse fully understood that his leg was gone.

"When it sunk in, I broke down," he said.

Jesse, who is a logger when not riding the wild horse racing circuit, leaned on his faith.

"He had a little talk with himself and the Lord," Lisa said.
"Since then, he's been peaceful."

"I've accepted the fact that it is what it is," Jesse said. "I have a lot of life left to live."

Jesse found his sense of humor again and joked with his surgeon, saying he wanted the doctor to re-
